Donation to science.

In partnership with A.T. Still University in Kirksville, Missouri, we can arrange whole-body donation for medical education and research.

SERVICE	PRICE
Whole-body donation to A.T. Still University We bring your loved one into our care, and the University contacts you to complete its donor application. Acceptance is the University's decision and depends on its medical criteria at the time of death. If the donor is accepted, we embalm and deliver to the University, and the University pays us directly for removal, embalming and transportation. There is no charge to the family. Once the donor is accepted, the University files the death certificate and provides certified copies; families request copies through the University's Anatomy Department rather than through us. Donors are typically with the University for about two years. Afterward the body is cremated and the cremated remains are returned to the family if requested on the donation form at the time of donation or in writing to the Anatomy Department at delivery; remains not returned are buried at Forest-Llewellyn Cemetery in Kirksville during the University's memorial service, held each fall, which families are welcome to attend.	No charge
If the donor is not accepted We'll let you know right away and offer direct cremation at the prices on this list. There is no charge for the time your loved one was in our care while the application was reviewed.	See direct cremation
